Dist. Ct. No. CV-92-6073-H0
Bankr. Case NO. 691-60081-H11

8/11/92                      Judge Redden Affirming PSH                      unpublished

District court affirmed Judge Higdon's letter opinion denying in part Bank's motion for relief from automatic stay to name managing partner, individually, of debtor in possession, a general partnership, as defendant in state court foreclosure proceeding. Debtor in possession held valid interests in 2 of 6 parcels of real property upon which Bank sought foreclosure. Debtor's managing partner had pledged the property to Bank as collateral for personal and partnership loans. Because Bank had signed the partnership agreement as trustee on behalf of two trusts for the benefit of the managing partner's grandchildren, which each held a one percent interest in the partnership, Bank is the general partner of debtor whose liability is not limited to the value of the trust assets. Moreover, its claim as a creditor must be subordinated under partnership law to those non-partner creditors. Therefore, Bank was not entitled to relief from stay regarding the properties in which debtor in possession had an interest.

REDDEN, Judge:

Commercial Bank appeals from the bankruptcy court's partial denial of its motion for relief from the automatic stay. For the reasons explained below, I affirm the bankruptcy court's ruling.

1 - OPINION

1 BACKGROUND

2 In 1957, Robert Corey and his wife Betty Corey formed a 3 general partnership to operate a chain of Hamburger stands, the 4 Bob's 19-cent Hamburgers partnership. In 1979 and again in 5 1980, the Coreys each transferred a one-half percent interest 6 in the partnership to separate trusts established for their two 7 grandchildren. As a result, the trusts each held a one percent
8 interest in the partnership and the Coreys each held 49 percent 9 interests.

10 Appellant Commercial Bank (Bank) was appointed trustee of 11 both trusts. While serving as trustee in the 1980s, Bank also 12 made several personal loans to Robert Corey.

13 On December 31, 1986, the trusts and the Coreys executed
14 a Liquidation of Partnership Agreement (dissolution agreement), 15 which dissolved the Bob's 19-cent Hamburgers partnership.
16 Under the dissolution agreement, direct ownership interests in 17 the partnership's assets were distributed to the Coreys and to 18 the trusts. Each received percentage shares in the assets 19 equivalent to the percentage of the partnership they had owned.
20 A trust officer of Bank signed the dissolution agreement as 21 trustee for the trusts.

22 Also on December 31, 1986, the Coreys and the trusts
23 executed a new partnership agreement, forming the Corey 24 Partners partnership. Under it, certain interests in real 25 property that had previously been owned by the Bob's 19 cent 26 Hamburger partnership were declared to be property of the new

1 partnership. As with the dissolution agreement, a Bank trust
2 officer signed the agreement for the trusts. On June 1, 1990, 3 Robert Corey removed Bank as trustee of the trusts.

4 In January 1991, Corey Partners filed a Chapter 11 5 bankruptcy petition. In the ensuing bankruptcy proceeding, the 6 Debtor in Possession (Debtor) included, in listing the assets 7 of the bankrupt estate, six properties which Robert Corey had 8 pledged to Bank as collateral for personal loans that were in 9 default.

10 Bank filed a motion in the bankruptcy court for relief 11 from the automatic stay.<sup>1</sup> Specifically, Bank requested to be 12 allowed to name Debtor as a defendant in a suit to foreclose on 13 its security interests in the six properties Debtor had listed 14 as assets of the bankrupt estate.

15 Debtor opposed the motion, arguing that Bank is a general
16 partner and creditor of Debtor. Because Bank is its general 17 partner, Debtor argued, Debtor has a right to offset -- against 18 any liability it has to bank -- its right to contribution from 19 Bank, as a partner, for partnership liabilities. Debtor also 20 argued that as a general partner, Bank's claims against it 21 should be subordinated under partnership law to those of non-22 partner creditors.

23 In response, Bank argued that the trust estates, not 24

25 <sup>1</sup> Under section 362 of the Bankruptcy Code, all suits against 26 a debtor are automatically stayed upon the debtor's filing of a Chapter 11 petition. 11 U.S.C. § 362.

1 Bank, are general partners in Debtor. Alternatively, if it is 2 general partner, Bank argued, its liability is limited to the 3 value of the trust assets.

4 The Bankruptcy court agreed with Debtor that Bank is a 5 general partner in Debtor, and that its liability as such is 6 not limited to the value of the trust assets. See August 26, 7 1991 Opinion, pp. 7-10. The court further found that, as to 8 properties in which the debtor has a valid interest, Bank was 9 also a creditor of debtor. Id. at 10-13. The court found that 10 Debtor held valid interests in two of the six properties at 11 issue: the Bernheim Contract and the Ranch, and therefore 12 denied Bank's motion for relief from the automatic stay as to 13 those properties.

14 Bank now appeals, challenging the court's finding that it 15 is a general partner of debtor, that its liability is not 16 limited to the value of the trust property it administered, and 17 the findings respecting the Bernheim contract and the Ranch.

18 STANDARD OF REVIEW

19 "The district court acts as an appellate court, reviewing 20 the bankruptcy court's findings of fact under the clearly 21 erroneous standard and its conclusions of law de novo." In re 22 Daniels-Head & Associates, 819 F.2d 914, 918 (9th Cir. 1987).

23 DISCUSSION

24 1. Is Bank a General Partner in Debtor?

25 a. The Bankruptcy Court's Analysis

26 In holding that Bank is a general partner in debtor, the

1 bankruptcy court noted that Bank signed the partnership 2 agreement as a partner. The agreement's first section lists as 3 parties Robert E. Corey, Betty L. Corey, Bank as trustee for 4 Justin R. Corey Trust, and Bank as trustee for Julia Laraine
5 Corey Trust. Ex. 2, Appellant's Excerpt of Record. These 6 parties are thereafter referred to throughout the agreement as 7 "Partners." Section 1.1 states their agreement to form a 8 general partnership under Oregon law.

9 The court rejected Bank's contention that the trusts, and 10 not Bank, were partners. The court reasoned that because trust 11 estates cannot themselves make promises, they cannot enter into 12 contracts, and therefore cannot be parties to a general
13 partnership agreement. Nor is a trustee an agent of the trust 14 under the law of agency, because a trust, being simply a 15 collection of property (or, in another sense, a description of 16 a relationship regarding property), cannot be a principal. The 17 court found the Oregon Uniform Partnership Act consistent with 18 its analysis in failing to specifically name "trusts" in its 19 nonexclusive listing of those "persons" who can enter into 20 partnership contracts. O.R.S. § 68.020(3). The court 21 concluded that:

22 when a trustee enters into a contract, even if 23 signing only in his representative capacity, it is 24 the trustee, not the trust, which is legally bound 25 by the promises it has made in the contract.

1     b.     Intent As a Requisite of Partnership Formation

2             Bank argues that it could not have become a partner in 3 Debtor under the Corey Partners agreement because the parties
4 to the agreement did not intend that result. It cites numerous 5 Oregon partnership cases for the proposition that partnerships 6 are creatures of voluntary contract, created only where the 7 parties intend it. The cited cases, however, demonstrate that 8 parties need not expressly intend to form a partnership (or to 9 become partners) to do so in the eyes of the law. Rather, in 10 determining whether a partnership exists in a given instance -- 11 and thus whether the legal rules governing partnerships apply -- 12 -- Oregon courts look to the nature of the parties' intended 13 arrangements. Where those arrangements have the attributes of 14 a partnership, the law treats them as such.

15             Thus, to form a partnership, parties need merely have 16 intended to form an association having the attributes of a 17 partnership: an entity separate from themselves as individuals 18 which they co-own and carry on as a business for profit. See 19 ORS 68.110(1).

20             [W]here the parties to a contract, by their acts, 21 conduct, or agreement, show that they intended to 22 combine their property, labor, skill, and 23 experience, or some of these elements on one side
24 and some on the other, to carry on, as principals 25 or co-owners, a common business, trade or venture 26 as a commercial enterprise, and to share, either expressly or by implication, the profits and losses or expenses that may be incurred, such parties are partners.

Eldridge, et al. v. Johnson, 195 Or. 379, 395, 245 P.2d 239,

1 246-47 (1952).

2 The Eldridge case is illustrative. There, a key 3 employee's contract to purchase an interest his employer's 4 business, under which the employee received a correlating share
5 of its profits, was held to create a partnership. By contrast, 6 the court in H.H. Worden Co. v. Beals, 120 Or. 66, 250 P.375 7 (1926) held that a contract providing for logging, milling and 8 sale of one party's timber by the other did not create a 9 partnership, because the parties dealt with each other as 10 individuals, without creating a separate business association 11 in which they shared a community of interest. In neither 12 Eldridge or Worden did the contracts make express references to 13 partnerships.

14 Bank argues there is no evidence in this case that it and 15 the Coreys intended to combine their property, labor, and/or 16 skill to carry on as co-owners of Debtor, and to share the 17 profits and losses as partners. Rather, Bank contends, it 18 acted only as the trustee of the two trusts, and was not 19 considered a partner by anyone.

20 This argument obscures and distorts the legal effect of 21 Bank's having acted as a trustee in executing the dissolution 22 and Corey Partners agreements. When considered in light of 23 relevant trust law, these agreements demonstrate that Bank and 24 the Coreys established a relationship having all the attributes 25 of a partnership, and is therefore appropriately treated as one 26 under the law.

1 Under the law of trusts, a trustee holds legal title to 2 property transferred into trust subject to the fiduciary duty
3 to deal with it for the benefit of the trust beneficiaries.
4 Restatement (Second) of Trusts, §§ 2, 88. Thus, when Bank
5 accepted its appointment as trustee of the two grandchildren's
6 trusts, it became the legal owner of separate one-percent 7 interests in the original Bob's 19-cent Hamburgers partnership.
8 Bank subsequently executed, as trustee, the agreement
9 dissolving Bob's 19-cent Hamburgers. Under that agreement, 10 Bank received, in exchange for the trust partnership interests, 11 direct interests in the property the partnership had owned.

12 In executing the Corey Partners Agreement, the Coreys and 13 Bank formed a new partnership. Each contributed the real 14 property interests that had been distributed to them under the 15 dissolution agreement. Consequently, the real property 16 formerly owned by Bob's 19-cent Hamburgers came to be owned by 17 the Corey Partners partnership. The new agreement expressly 18 provided that the parties would share the partnership's profits 19 and losses in proportion to their stated ownership shares, and 20 designated Robert Corey as the managing partner. Thus, on its 21 face, the Corey Partners Agreement evidences the parties' 22 intent to combine their property and to carry on, as co-owners, 23 a common business, sharing its profits and losses. Because the 24 agreement incorporates all the critical elements of a 25 partnership, the relationship it establishes would be treated 26 as a partnership under Oregon law even if it were not expressly

1 referred to as one.

2 c. Facts Showing Lack of Intent to Form a Partnership

3 Bank asserts the following facts as evidence that the 4 parties did not intend it to be a partner in Debtor. First, 5 Bank contends that it did not consider itself a partner, nor 6 intend to be held personally liable. Both Wendy Weaver, the 7 trust department's trust officer who signed the agreement, and 8 Marvin Abeene, Trust Department Manager, testified that they 9 believed that by executing documents "as trustee," the trust 10 department, as a matter of law, could not be held personally 11 liable. Bank contends it would not have executed the 12 agreements if it were aware that in doing so it risked personal 13 liability.

14 Second, when the partnership agreement was signed, Bank 15 contends, the Coreys knew that the trust department did not 16 consider itself personally liable. Mr. Corey had served as a 17 director of Bank for twenty years, and for much of that time -- 18 possibly ten years -- had been a member of its trust committee.
19 Abeene testified that, as a member of that committee, Mr. Corey 20 would have been well aware that the trust department had a 21 policy against exposing itself to personal liability in 22 entering into contracts on behalf of trusts. Mr. Corey himself 23 testified that he considered the trust department the 24 "custodian" of the trusts. The Coreys did not hold the trust 25 department out as a partner in debtor, and its financial 26 statements did not include the bank's assets. The Coreys'

1 accountant filed yearly partnership income tax returns on 2 behalf of the trusts as partners.

3 Finally, Bank points out that after it was removed as 4 trustee on June 1, 1990, the partnership was not dissolved.
5 Under O.R.S. 68.510 and 68.530(1)(d), Bank argues, a 6 partnership dissolves when any partner ceases to be associated 7 with the carrying on of the business or is removed. Yet, 8 following Bank's removal, Corey Partners undertook no steps to 9 wind up its affairs, but rather, as Mr. Corey testified, 10 continued business as usual. No new partnership was formed.

11 None of these contentions undermines the evidence that 12 Bank and the Coreys arranged a contractual relationship that 13 includes all of the critical elements of a partnership, and 14 which the law will therefore regard as a partnership. Rather, 15 they are probative of the parties' subjective understandings of 16 the legal effect of their contract. As discussed above, 17 however, Oregon partnership law does not require that to form a 18 partnership, parties have expressly intended to do so -- or 19 even have understood that they have done so. For this reason, 20 these contentions are not helpful to Bank's argument that it 21 could not have become a partner for lack of partnership intent.
22 A partnership was clearly established under the Corey Partners
23 agreement. If Bank is personally liable on that contract, it 24 is a general partner in debtor. That it may not have 25 understood the legal effect of the contract it executed is not 26 grounds for relieving it from its resulting obligations. Shell

1 Oil Co. v. Boyer, 234 Or. 270, 277-78, 381 P.2d 494 (1963).

2 d. The Trusts as Partners

3 Bank maintains, however, that the trust estates, and not 4 Bank, are liable under the agreement. It contends that the 5 bankruptcy court erred in concluding that trusts cannot enter 6 into contracts, and thus cannot be general partners, citing 7 Ogden Railway Co. v. Wright, 31 Or. 150, 49 P. 975 (1897) and 8 Richmond v. Ogden Street Ry Co., 44 Or. 48, 74 P. 333 (1903).
9 Neither case, however, supports a contrary conclusion.

10 In Ogden Railway Co., the Oregon Supreme Court reversed 11 the dismissal of a complaint brought against two trustees in 12 their personal capacities. Plaintiff sued on promissory notes
13 the defendants had signed "as trustees." The Court rejected 14 the defendants' contentions that they had signed the notes only 15 as representatives of the trusts. Its analysis echoes that of 16 the bankruptcy court here: a "trust estate cannot promise," and 17 thus cannot be a principal, and a contract entered into by a 18 trustee is therefore the personal undertaking of the trustee.
19 31 Or. at 153, 49 P. at 976 (quoting Taylor v. Davis, 110 U.S.
20 330 (1883)). The court acknowledged, however, that the 21 trustees' liability could be limited by express agreement 22 between the contracting parties. Id.

23 In Richmond, the Court affirmed a decree reforming the 24 notes that had been at issue in Ogden Railway, based on 25 unequivocal testimony by the parties that in executing the 26 notes they had agreed the trustees' liability was limited to

1 the amount of the trust property they held, and they were not 2 to incur personal liability. 44 Or. at 51-52, 74 P. at 334.
3 Bank also cites Rothschild Bros. v. Kennedy, 86 Or. 566, 169 P.
4 102 (1917), which goes no further, noting specifically that 5 "even though [the trustee] purchased the goods for the benefit 6 of the trust estate, he would be personally liable in the 7 absence of an agreement exempting him from liability." 169
8 P.2d at 104.

9 Bank also cites Terminal Trading v. Babbitt, 109 P.2d 564
10 (Wa. 1941). There, the Washington Supreme Court reasoned that 11 the rule that a trust estate cannot contract is one of 12 necessity. It therefore refused to apply the rule where the 13 trust estate was a corporation, a legal entity that is capable 14 of contracting. 109 P.2d at 568. Terminal Trading is 15 distinguishable from this case, as the trust estates at issue 16 here are not legal entities capable of contracting.

17 e. Restatement of Trusts § 265

18 Bank also argues that because it merely held title in the 19 partnership for the benefit of the trusts, its liability is 20 limited under Restatement (Second) of Trusts § 265, to the 21 extent the trust can indemnify it. This argument speaks to 22 both Bank's status -- whether it is a general partner -- and 23 that the scope of its resulting liability. Its thrust is that 24 bank was merely a passive trustee. In support, Bank emphasizes 25 that it did not participate in the hamburger business after the 26 initial trust transfers; it was not consulted regarding

1 partnership business decisions; it was not notified of 2 partnership meetings; and it was not consulted regarding the 3 plan to dissolve the old partnership and create a new one.
4 Rather, Bank merely executed the documents relating to 5 formation of the new partnership, as requested by Robert E.
6 Corey, so that the trusts could maintain their one percent
7 ownership interests in the Coreys' business. After formation 8 of the new partnership, the Bank's role continued to be 9 passive.

10 Restatement of Trusts (Second), § 265, on which Bank 11 relies, provides that:

12 Where a liability to third person is imposed upon a 13 person, not as a result of a contract made by him 14 or a tort committed by him but because he is the 15 holder of the title to property, a trustee as 16 holder of the title to the trust property is subject to personal liability, but only to the extent to which the trust estate is sufficient to indemnify him.

17 (emphasis added).

18 Bank incurs liability here not merely because it held 19 title to property for the trusts, but as a consequence of the 20 contract it made as trustee to form the new partnership.

21 Although it may not have intended to do more than hold title
22 for the trusts, it does not follow from that subjective intent 23 that it is entitled to the benefit of the Restatement § 265 rule.

24 f. Conclusion: Bank is a General Partner in Debtor

25 As discussed above, that the parties did not expressly 26

1 intend that Bank become a partner in Debtor did not preclude it
2 from doing so under partnership law. The Corey Partners 3 agreement contains all the elements of partnership, and 4 therefore established one as a matter of law. Under 5 controlling Oregon precedent in the Ogden Railway cases, Bank 6 as trustee is personally liable on that contract, as trusts are 7 incapable of entering into contracts. For these reasons, I 8 affirm the bankruptcy court's holding that Bank is a general
9 partner in Debtor.

10 2. Is Bank Liable Beyond the Extent of the Trust Property It 11 Administered?

12 a. The Bankruptcy Court's Analysis

13 In holding that Bank's liability as a general partner is 14 not limited to the trust assets, the bankruptcy court noted 15 that at common law, a trustee's personal liability to third 16 parties arising in the administration of the trust was 17 unlimited. It recognized, however, that in Ogden Railway, 18 Richmond, and Rothschild Bros., supra, trustees were relieved 19 of personal liability on contracts to provide goods or services 20 based on factual showings that the contracting parties had 21 agreed the trustees' liability was limited to the amount of 22 trust assets.

23 The bankruptcy court found the Ogden Railway line of 24 cases inapplicable here, due to a key difference in the nature 25 of general partnership agreements from that of contracts for 26 the sale of goods or services. By executing a general

1 partnership agreement -- unlike other contracts -- the parties 2 create a new legal entity capable of suing and being sued in 3 its own name. A defining characteristic of that entity is that 4 the partners are personally liable for its debts; the creditors 5 of the partnership may reach the partner's personal assets to 6 satisfy partnership debts. Thus, the court reasoned,

7 [I]f the document signed is agreed to be a general
8 partnership agreement, as here, then absent
9 language in the document allowing it one cannot say 10 that the liability of the general partner signators 11 may be limited. Such a statement would be 12 oxymoronic.

13 [Bank's] status as . . . a partner includes by 14 definition personal liability for the debts of the 15 partnership. It cannot now be heard to argue that 16 the law of trusts should be applied to limit its 17 liability.

18 August 26, 1991 Op., p. 10.

19 The court further held that even if Ogden Railway line of 20 cases were applicable, it could not find that Bank had shown 21 that the parties to the partnership agreement had intended its 22 liability to be limited.

23 b. Bank's Argument

24 Bank contends that partnership agreements are no
25 different from other contracts for the purposes of Ogden 26 Railway. It then emphasizes language in the Ogden Railway decision which suggests that a trustee's liability is limited where the facts and circumstances surrounding a contract's execution indicate this was the parties' intent.

1 Finally, emphasizing the same facts it asserted as 2 evidence the parties never intended it to be a partner (see 3 ante, pp. 9-10), Bank argues that the facts and circumstances
4 surrounding the execution of the Corey Partners agreement
5 indicates the parties did not intend Bank to be liable beyond 6 the extent of the trust assets.

7 c. Analysis

8 The bankruptcy court's conclusion that the Ogden Railway 9 liability limiting rule is inapplicable to general partnership 10 agreements is well reasoned. By the contracts involved in 11 Richmond and Rothschild Bros., the parties limited their 12 liability to one another. By contrast, for the parties here to 13 have limited Bank's liability as a partner, they would have 14 limited its liability to others, in a manner inconsistent with 15 the defining characteristic of the very form of association 16 they expressly purported to adopt. Bank conclusorily dismisses 17 this distinction without addressing its merits.

18 Even if the bankruptcy court erred in finding Ogden 19 Railway inapplicable, Bank has not shown that it is entitled to 20 relief under that rule. Bank's reliance on "facts and 21 circumstances" surrounding execution of the Corey Partners 22 agreement is misplaced. Under Ogden Railway, Richmond, and 23 Rothschild Bros., an express understanding is required to limit
24 a trustee's liability under a contract. Bank has submitted no 25 evidence that the parties agreed its liability as trustee was 26 limited. I affirm the Bankruptcy's court's ruling that Bank's

1 liability as a partner in debtor is not limited.

2 3. Should Bank Be Granted Relief From the Automatic Stay To 3 Foreclose on the Bernheim Contract and The Ranch?

4 Bank challenges the bankruptcy court's findings that the 5 Bernheim Contract and the Ranch are assets of the debtor 6 partnership. Both of these properties were declared by the 7 Corey Partners agreement to be partnership property, taken 8 subject to existing encumbrances.

9 a. The Bernheim Contract

10 The Bernheim contract is a land sale contract in which 11 Robert E. Corey held a vendor's interest. In 1985, Corey 12 assigned his interest to Bank as collateral for personal loans.
13 That assignment contained a future advances clause. The 14 contract was transferred to the Corey Partners on December 31, 15 1986, under the partnership agreement, subject to existing 16 encumbrances. In 1987 and 1989, Corey again assigned the 17 contract to Bank as security for further personal loans.

18 The bankruptcy court found that Bank had held a perfected 19 security interest in the Bernheim contract at the time the 20 contract was transferred to the partnership. September 27, 21 1991 Op., p. 2-3. The court also found that the future 22 advances clause in the 1985 assignment secured Bank's 1987 and 23 1989 loans. August 26, 1991 Op., p. 17. Thus, Bank's security 24 interest extended to the amounts owed on those loans although 25 they were made after title to the contract had passed to the 26 partnership. Bank argues that because the debt secured by

1 its security interest exceeds the value of the contract, debtor 2 has no equity in the contract. Further, Bank's interest in the 3 contract is not a partnership obligation, because it predated 4 formation of the partnership.

5 Bank's arguments undermine the logic of subordinating its 6 claim to those of nonpartner creditors under ORS 68.620(2). To 7 grant Bank relief from the stay would nonetheless be 8 inappropriate in light of Debtor's right to offset any 9 contributions it may need from Bank as its partnership to pay 10 partnership liabilities. See ORS 68.620(1)(b) and (4). For 11 that reason, I affirm the bankruptcy court's ruling denying 12 relief as to the Bernheim contract.

13 b. The Ranch

14 The Ranch is a piece of real property previously owned by 15 Robert Corey. In 1982, Corey and U.S. Housing and Development
16 Corporation mortgaged the Ranch to Bank. U.S. Housing was a 17 Corey-controlled corporation that went out of business in the 18 early 1980s. The 1982 mortgage contained a future advances 19 clause. Corey transferred the Ranch to the partnership by 20 quitclaim deed on December 31, 1986. On September 30, 1987, 21 Bank released the 1982 mortgage.

22 Robert Corey individually mortgaged Ranch to Bank on 23 September 30, 1987 and May 19, 1989. On the same dates, Corey 24 signed "Consent to Pledge" forms granting liens to Bank. Corey 25 signed the consents twice, once individually and once on behalf 26 of Corey Partners.

1           The Bankruptcy court found the 1987 and 1989 mortgages
2 ineffective to grant liens on Ranch to Bank. Bank could not 3 rely on the 1982 mortgage's future advances clause because it 4 had released that mortgage. Further, the partnership, which 5 owned Ranch after December 31, 1986, had not authorized use of 6 its interest as collateral for personal loans to Robert Corey.
7 August 26, 1991 Op., p. 18. The court therefore denied Bank 8 relief from the automatic stay.

9           Bank argues the court erred in failing to find that the 10 1987 mortgage was merely a continuation of the existing 1982
11 (personal) mortgage. It cites Schwartzler v. Lemas, 82 P.2d 12 419 (Cal. 1938) for the proposition that the 1987 and 1989 13 mortgages are not mortgages on partnership property. In 14 Schwartzler, Lemas mortgaged business equipment to secure two 15 promissory notes. Lemas later sold a 50 percent interest in 16 the business to Vierra. Vierra knew of the notes and mortgage 17 and took his interest subject to the mortgage. Subsequently, 18 Lemas executed a new mortgage on the same equipment to renew 19 and extend one of the original notes. When the note was not 20 paid, the lender foreclosed. Vierra intervened, objecting that 21 the second mortgage, executed after he had purchased his 22 interest in the business, was not binding on him.

23           The California court held that the second mortgage had 24 "created no new obligation." 82 P.2d at 421.

25           Under the circumstances of this case the lien 26 created by the first mortgage was never extinguished. The second mortgage therefore did

1 not abridge the rights acquired by Vierra. There 2 is substantial proof that the [second] mortgage was 3 executed to renew the original $3,317 note which was secured by the first mortgage and that the original lien was therefore not extinguished.

4 Id. The court found that Lemas had not mortgaged partnership 5 property by executing the second mortgage, but had merely 6 extended the original mortgage, subject to which Vierra had 7 taken his interest. Vierra was therefore bound by it.

8 Bank contends the 1987 loan in this case was a 9 consolidation of several outstanding loans Corey owed Bank, 10 including that secured by the 1982 mortgage on Ranch, and 11 therefore that, under Schwartzler, it should be considered to 12 have been a mere extension of the original 1982 mortgage. For 13 this reason, Bank continues, the 1987 lien should not be viewed 14 as having been a transfer of partnership property. Therefore, 15 whether Corey had been authorized to use such property as 16 collateral for his personal loans is irrelevant.

17 Bank's analogy to Schwartzler is unpersuasive. There, 18 the partnership property was re-mortgaged to secure the same 19 note, in the same amount, that it had originally been mortgaged 20 for when the new partner, Vierra, bought his interest. The 21 record here is not clear as to the amount of indebtedness the 22 Ranch secured at the time the partnership took title. Several 23 different loans are involved. The 1987 and 1989 mortgages
24 purported to secure new loans in an amount that consolidated 25 several prior loans that were outstanding. Thus, the Ranch was 26 mortgaged to secure new and different obligations.

1 Bank also argues that even if the bankruptcy court was 2 correct in concluding that the 1987 loan was not a renewal of 3 the 1982 loan, it erred in finding Corey had not been 4 authorized to grant the liens on Ranch. Bank argues that in 5 mortgaging Ranch in 1987 and 1989, Corey had apparent authority 6 to act on the partnership's behalf, because he appeared to be 7 "carrying on in the usual way" the business of the partnership.
8 ORS 68.210. Bank also argues Corey also had actual authority, 9 citing the partnership agreement's provision giving him, as 10 managing partner, responsibility for all investment and 11 business decisions. Finally, bank argues that the partnership 12 should be deemed to have ratified Corey's actions by virtue of 13 the partners' acceptance of the benefits of those actions.
14 Bank contends the partners benefitted because if Corey had not 15 restructured his debts, the Bank and another mortgage holder, 16 U.S. National Bank, would have foreclosed on their interests, 17 to the detriment of the partners.

18 These arguments are also unpersuasive. Pledging 19 partnership property as security for personal debt cannot 20 reasonably be seen as carrying on the partnership's business in 21 the usual way. Nor can the partnership agreement's language
22 granting the managing partner authority to conduct business 23 reasonably be construed to actually authorize such action.
24 Finally, as the debtor argued in response, there is no evidence 25 that the other partners, Bank's trust department or Betty 26 Corey, knowingly accepted any benefit from Robert Corey's

1 actions.

2 CONCLUSION

3 I affirm the bankruptcy court's partial denial of the 4 motion for relief from the automatic stay.
